Students completing the Applied Linguistics B.A. are expected to:

- demonstrate broad-based knowledge of the fundamentals of applied linguistics, including language structure and language use in relation to culture, society, communication, and language acquisition.

- demonstrate developing skills in library research, analytical methods, data collection and interpretation, analytic writing, and/or involvement with the community, for language related issues.

- understand and value diverse perspectives on language use and language users in society and diverse methods of research in applied linguistics.