Students are expected to:

- demonstrate mastery of major substantive areas of communication studies, including: (1) Mass Communication and Media Institutions, (2) Interpersonal Communication, (3) Communication Technology and Digital Systems, and (4) Political and Legal Communication.

- place particular communication events or examples in context of broader patterns of human activity.

- critically evaluate arguments based on evidence.

- design and implement original research projects.

- use their acquired general and disciplinary-based knowledge and skills to complete an applied project that demonstrates core competencies in communication studies.

- actively participate in “learning in practice” opportunities at UCLA and beyond.