

UCLA

Student Learning Outcomes for the B.A. in Spanish and Community and Culture

The Spanish and Community and Culture major is a designated capstone major. Undergraduates participate in community-based, experiential learning courses coupled with elective and adjunct courses. Reflective journals, final projects, and in-class presentations are required. Graduates achieve core competencies in written and oral communication, critical thinking, and information literacy and will be able to:

- demonstrate a mastery of the Spanish language, both written and conversational.
- conduct and interpret research to determine the needs of specific communities.
- demonstrate a critical understanding of, and an ability to apply, theories within a service context.
- demonstrate sensitivity to diversity and cultural differences.
- perform scholarly presentations that tie current issues to research and theory.
- articulate the value of civic engagement.